Driving Knowledge-Led Innovation within Smart and Sustainable Communities and Organizations

Organizers

Mauro Romanelli, University of Naples Parthenope, Italy

Alexandra Zbucea, National University of Political Studies and Public Administration (SNSPA), Romania

Alessandra Lardo, University of Naples Parthenope, Italy

Description

The future development of organisations and communities relies on promoting knowledge-driven innovation for value creation. Smart and sustainable growth relies on organizations and communities that increasingly invest in knowledge management, deal with knowledge sharing and transfer by developing social, inclusive and technological innovations within social, business and urban ecosystems. Smart and sustainable organisations and communities contribute to value creation, driving technological, social and collaborative innovation, by managing and sharing knowledge for inclusive growth. Digital transformation enables knowledge management and sharing processes, leading to social and organisational intelligence and opening to smart, socially innovative, inclusive and human-centred and knowledge-led organisations and communities, shaping collaborative as well as digital working spaces. Smart organizations and communities drive knowledge-led, human-centred and technology-driven innovation, following a relational view and developing knowledge management for collaborative spaces and open innovation within digital, business, knowledge and social ecosystems.

The track aims to stimulate the debate on theoretical and empirical studies that elucidate how knowledge-driven innovation is emerging within organisations and communities that are following a knowledge management view relying on the potential of digital transformation, human and artificial intelligence to achieve smart and sustainable growth and regeneration. Consider the following open list of possible themes: social, inclusive, organizational and technological innovation, knowledge management for innovation within digital, social, business, healthcare, urban and cultural ecosystems, smart and sustainable communities, smart and sustainable organisations, smart government, digital transformation for managing knowledge and advancing social and urban intelligence and innovation,
